CANSON SECULATION OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PROPE

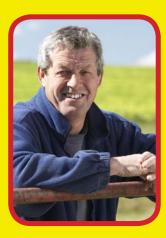

Foster Care Fortnight™ 2014

Your guide to getting involved

For Foster Care Fortnight™ 2014!

Members of the public are being asked if they can guess who fosters as part of the Fostering Network's Foster Care Fortnight™ this year.

The annual campaign, which this year takes place from Monday 12 to Sunday 25 May, raises the profile of foster care across the UK and is an opportunity for fostering services to raise awareness to help recruit the foster carers they need, as well as publicly thanking their foster carers for the work they do.

Part of the recruitment activity will involve dispelling myths on who can foster. This year's Guess who fosters theme aims to take this one step further by providing fostering services with the opportunity to highlight the skills and qualities needed to foster for their service.

In January 2014 we launched our recruitment targets for the year to publicise the need for more people to come forward to foster some of society's most vulnerable children. For two weeks in May the media spotlight focuses on fostering. This guide is packed with suggestions for how your fostering service can get involved and make the most of Foster Care Fortnight™ 2014.

For more information on the Fostering Network's Foster Care Fortnight™ 2014 please contact

James Foyle
Recruitment and retention consultant

T 020 7620 6443 E james.foyle@fostering.net

Building on Foster Care Fortnight™ 2013

Foster Care Fortnight^m 2014 builds on last year's call to action to Get in the frame, the theme for Foster Care Fortnight^m 2013.

The aim of the Get in the frame campaign was to encourage people who have an interest in, a connection to or would like to support fostering in their area, to put themselves in the frame to raise the profile of fostering.

Fostering services across the UK took to their high streets, airwaves and print to truly bring the campaign to life.

Our online gallery picked out some of the stars of the campaign, including sons of foster carers Gareth Gates and children's minister Edward Timpson MP, care leaver Claire Marshall and Josephine McClelland, winner of the 2013 Foster Carer of the Year in Northern Ireland.

The Fostering Network's Pinterest page was also packed full with pictures sent in by fostering services, capturing the diversity of people interested in and connected to fostering. Swansea City Council created their 12 days to make a difference campaign while Telford and Wrekin launched Put yourself in the frame, campaigns which have both continued throughout the year.

Creating a visually impactful campaign, while building on the foundations many fostering services established for last year's Foster Care Fortnight^m was high on the list when deciding on this year's theme...

This year's theme turns the spotlight on your fostering service's current foster carers, challenging any pre-conceived stereotypes as to who can foster and providing a vehicle to showcase their skills and qualities, thereby recognising their achievements to complement your foster carer retention activities as well as recruitment.

Who should I pick?

Pick from your current foster carers those who will speak positively about their experience of fostering with you and will help to attract the types of new foster carers you need to meet the needs of your local looked after children. On the cover, we have chosen a relatively broad selection of society, but you may prefer to focus your campaign on a particular ethnic group, or people who live in more rural settings, for example, depending on your local need for foster carers. Involving your foster carers in the planning and development of your campaign will show that you value their input, which will be reflected in their willingness to help you.

In the spirit of guessing, there need to be some 'wrong' answers too ie people who do not foster. As in the example of the Get in the frame campaign, these can be people who do not foster themselves but are connected to fostering in another way: a local celebrity who supports your campaign, a son or daughter of a foster carer or a care leaver who has gone on to university, started a career or had their own family.

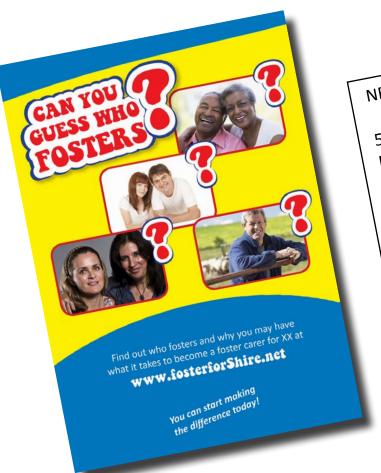

What if our foster carers don't want to take part?

As many of you know, word of mouth remains an incredibly powerful tool to help recruit new foster carers. For those foster carers who aren't keen to take part in the marketing campaign, you can still engage them to attend local fostering information evenings, staff the phones for initial enquiries and help your service run stalls and coffee mornings. To take their place in the visual part of your campaign, stockphoto websites such as thinkstockphotos.co.uk or shutterstock.com provide affordable alternatives.

Once we've chosen, what should we do?

There are many ways for you to use Guess who fosters. Use your images on posters and flyers, and create a buzz in your local high street by inviting foster carers and others to attend and encouraging members of the public to guess who fosters. Create a gallery on your website, hyperlinking the images through to pages with the individual's profile, release a case study a day on your social media channels or use them to create a feature in your local media...

USING THE THEME

NEWS RELEASE

50 MORE FOSTER CARERS NEEDED

Claire, a police officer for GuessWhoFosters is asking members of the public if they could identify her as a they carer in a line up as foster carer in a line up as part of this year's Foster Care Fortnight™.

Members of the public are invited to....

SEARCH

GUESS WHO FOSTERS

HOME \

HEALTH AND SOCIAL CARE

CHILDREN AND FAMILIES

FOSTERING

BECOMING A FOSTER CARER

TYPES OF FOSTERING

TRAINING AND SUPPORT

FOSTER CARE FORTNIGHT

GUESS WHO FOSTERS

MIKE'S STORY

WAI'S STORY

GUESS WHO FOSTERS

Can you guess who of these people are foster carers just by looking at them? What skills, qualities and experience might they have to make them excellent foster carers?

Click on each image to read more about them and see whether you have any similarities that would make you a great foster carer like them.

Seven tips for developing your campaign

1. What do we want to achieve?

Be clear from the outset what your service wants to achieve this Foster Care Fortnight™. Create a list of objectives and the methods through which you intend to achieve them. Is it a retention opportunity? If yes, how will you ensure all your foster carers are included or are there particular groups to which you want to pay special attention? Or is it a recruitment exercise? If so how many new foster carers do you need and how many visits to your websites or initial enquiries do you think you need to generate in order to achieve this? This will be influenced by:

2. Who do we need to target?

Completing a needs assessment might seem to many a daunting prospect. But it is a vital cog in understanding the needs of looked after children in your area, the foster carers you currently have and therefore where the gaps are. Help is available in the Fostering Network website's recruitment and retention section.

3. How much resource do we have?

As with last year's Get in the frame, this year's campaign can be as large or small as you want it to be. Your service's existing foster carers are a fantastic resource available to you. Given this is a time when the majority of fostering services are doing some form of recruitment activity, are there local opportunities to work in partnership to share expenses and spread the campaign wider?

4. What does our campaign look like?

Based on what you've found in tip two above, tailor your campaign imagery to reflect the types of people your fostering service is seeking to recruit. Sticking with the Guess who fosters theme or incorporating the call to action into your current strapline will help amplify your message and allow you to be part of the national campaign.

5. Communicate and update

Foster carer recruitment and retention is a team effort, right from the top of your organisation including the chief executive or the lead member to those on the ground making it happen. Map out exactly who needs to be informed or involved to make sure that everybody connected is up to speed on what your fostering service is hoping to achieve through the campaign and crucially beyond.

6. Be prepared

The hope with any marketing campaign is that your target audience will respond to your call to action. Make sure that your enquiry lines are sufficiently staffed for an increase in calls, and that everyone in the process is able to respond quickly to help maintain the enquirer's interest.

7. Evaluate

Evaluation of course comes at the end of the campaign to assess its effectiveness at meeting the objectives you set. It is though important not only to set SMART objectives in the development of the campaign but also to be flexible enough to react and adjust elements during it to overcome obstacles and make the most of Foster Care Fortnight $^{\text{TM}}$.

GETTING MEDIA COVERAGE

The Fostering Network generates substantial media coverage throughout *Foster Care*Fortnight™. This provides the perfect opportunity for your fostering service to make the most of the heightened media interest in fostering in your area.

If you have a press office, ensure that they are understand the Foster Care Fortnight™ theme and how you are using it. Also update them on the types of foster carers you are hoping to recruit, so that they can recommend the best outlets to help achieve this.

Be sure to let them know what events and activity you are planning, and ask them to invite journalists where relevant (always getting appropriate permissions or putting in place restrictions on filming and photography where children are present).

It will also be of use to them if you can provide any of the following information to help them gain coverage:

- Local fostering facts and figures, including the number of new and types of foster families your service needs. This could form the basis of a news story.
- Case studies and photographs of existing foster carers and care leavers local media will want a human angle to bring the story to life. These can form the basis of features or illustrate a news piece.
- Letters, comment pieces or blogs written by foster carers or care leavers about why they foster or the difference that fostering made to their life.
- Details of information sessions you are holding.
- Any celebrity support that you have achieved, or quotes from the celebrities supporting the national campaign.

For further information about engaging the media, download our maximising media coverage guide from www.fostering.net. You can also keep up to date with our news releases at www.fostering.net/media

If you don't have press office support, you can also contact media@fostering.net for advice about working with the media

CELEBRITY SUPPORT

A locally recognisable celebrity can give your Foster Care Fortnight™ campaign a significant boost to not only engage local media but capture the interest of prospective foster carers.

In 2013, the Fostering Network built on our existing relationships, capturing a whole range of celebrities including Lorraine Pascale, Gareth Gates, Jacqueline Wilson, Tim Rhys Evans and the lead politicians for children across all four countries in the UK in the frame.

We did this by getting back in touch with their agents – www.spotlight.com is a useful website to find contact details – and specifically targeted those people with a connection to fostering.

Locally, Somerset County Council continued last year's success by securing support from local resident Sir Ranulph Fiennes and former care leaver Bruce Oldfield. South Gloucestershire Council snapped former England wicketkeeper and resident Jack Russell, while Hertfordshire managed to get the cast of Birds of a Feather in their frame.

There were also many more examples of local radio presenters, weather presenters and politicians. These are the people we really do advise you to try and engage with as they will have a local connection and as in the case of Tom Isaac, a rugby player for Ospreys, can help attract new audiences to foster care.

With their permission (gained through their agent), you can invite your celebrity to the launch of your campaign, present at an awards event or even just provide a supportive quote to back your campaign. Including them as a 'red herring' in your guess who fosters imagery will certainly spark interest.

Having a celebrity support your campaign is not the be all or end all to make your campaign a success, particularly given this year's theme focusing on those people who currently foster. Do not be tempted to persistently target celebrities on social media to support your campaign if they or their agent do not appear keen to be involved. Also, be prepared to offer to cover any expenses such as travel, but paying a fee for their appearance is unnecessary — save your resources to use elsewhere in your campaign.

Our celebrities are your celebrities

Use the quotes and pictures of celebrities who back our Foster Care Fortnight™ campaign in your local activity, for example, "Gareth Gates supports Foster Care Fortnight™. Find out how you can foster with (INSERT YOUR NAME) fostering service."

WHATELSE CAN WE DO TO GET INVOLVED

Offlines advertising, information sessions and activities

Advertising

It is true, online media is forging ahead of its offline equivalent, but advertising in printed media through magazines, newspapers and trade press can still be relevant to your cause. It is also adapting, often meaning that as well as coverage in the hard copy version of the publication, your advert will also feature in the online version as well.

Check in with your communications colleagues, either within the team or in a corporate centre, who may have existing relationships with relevant publications to advise on a channel that will reach your target audience and ensure you get the best value for money.

Information sessions

The majority of fostering services now hold information sessions for those interested in fostering on a regular basis, often inviting current foster carers and their sons and daughters along to talk about their experience of fostering. As Durham Council did with the Fostering Network's recruitment targets news release, your fostering service can use Foster Care Fortnight™ to signpost to your upcoming sessions and incorporate the Guess who fosters theme into the session.

Activities

Publicity stunts, such as Essex's abseil or Blackburn and Darwen's fostering freeze in 2012, require a lot of co-ordination and commitment but they do provide a fantastic spectacle to generate interest. This year's Guess who fosters theme could lend itself to a competition in your region or a large scale event in your local high street. Do make sure you have all the necessary permissions before going ahead.

Online

The Guess who fosters theme provides a great opportunity to develop online content. You can create online case studies of your existing foster carers alongside members of your team, local councillors and so on as the 'red herrings', ie not foster carers themselves but connected to and supporting foster care.

Through social media, you can post daily questions challenging people to guess who fosters, the skills required to be a foster carer, the requirements for your fostering service and so on to create interactive content and boost your social following.

HOW THE FOSTERING NETWORK CAN SUPPORT YOU

Throughout the year, the Fostering Network continues to work on a number of initiatives to support fostering services to recruit and retain foster carers.

Our recently published Why foster carers care and Local Authority fostering service benchmark reports provide information on the values of foster carers and local authority performance across a number of recruitment benchmarks, respectively, to help inform your recruitment and retention activity.

The full complement of the Fostering Network's recruitment and retention resources is available from the recruitment and retention section of our website, including the Motivations to foster toolkit, Recruiting the foster care workforce of the future guide and Getting started in social media guide.

Keep up to date on our social media activity during the fortnight through our Facebook, www.facebook.com/thefosteringnetwork, and Twitter, @fosteringnet, accounts where we will be posting daily updates for you to use and share.

You can also sign up to receive our monthly Attracting and Keeping Carers blog, which will have special editions during Foster Care Fortnight™ to keep you up to date with all the great activity happening around the UK. And join in the debate in our monthly online discussion about recruitment and retention topics.

For more information on any of the above, please contact James Foyle:

T 020 7620 6443 E james.foyle@fostering.net

look out on Twitter for #guesswhofosters and use it in your tweets!

HOW WE CAN HELP EACH OTHER

Partnerships between fostering services are popping up across the UK in an effort to benefit many different aspects of foster care from commissioning to training and recruitment.

The work of the north west England local authorities involved in the You Can Foster campaign continues to be championed as an area of good practice which other fostering services are working to emulate. The Department for Education has provided funding to three consortia for 2013/15 to bring together both local authority fostering services and those from the independent sector to identify opportunities to improve foster carer recruitment locally.

As the Fostering Network published in January 2014, we estimate the need for around 8,600 new foster carers in 2014 alone. But we often hear from foster carers who are without a placement and on frequent occasions have never had a placement despite being approved for a number of months.

By working together across sectors, fostering services can identify the local fostering needs of the looked after children population and recruit only those people who will be able to provide the right type of foster care to meet their needs.

ORGANISATIONAL SUPPORT

Similarly to celebrity support, the backing of a local business can provide added media interest to your campaign and again, help engage more of the people your fostering service would like to hear from.

Tesco and O2 are two larger scale organisations which have foster family friendly policies to help support employees interested in becoming a foster carer. During last year's Foster Care Fortnight™ Tesco, through local community managers, hosted a number of fostering services' stands in foyers to help promote local campaigns.

There may be other organisations that operate in your area which are keen to support a local good cause through their corporate social responsibility (CSR). Challenging staff of a local business to try and guess who fosters will be a fun, interactive and engaging technique to gain interest. You can then work with that employer to help facilitate any individuals who would like to take their enquiry further.

prosperity
friendly corporate business
succesful
pusiness firm
job prosperity
Succesful
employment
prosperity
corporate trade
customer client meeting partner
handshake sales
Succesful
appointment job
employment
prosperity firm jobt prosperity rade partner
handshake sales
succesful
appointment job
employment
friendsfriendly trade in specific partner friendsfriendly trade in specific prosperity firm jobt prosperity job prosperity job promise gignature appointment business pact business partnership promise signature agreement employment partner successful dient prosperity buyer prosperity job prosperit

SUSTAINING INTEREST AFTER THE CAMPAIGN

Foster carer recruitment is a year round activity, with many fostering services evaluating and learning from previous campaigns in order to launch recruitment campaigns at specific times of the year, Foster Care Fortnight™ often being one of them.

The objective of the Foster Care Fortnight[™] for the Fostering Network is to raise the profile of fostering across the UK and provide an opportunity for fostering services to create local activity to tie in with the campaign, often with an aim to recruit new foster carers.

Fostering services often experience a spike in the number of enquiries they receive during these campaigns, but many express that this initial interest is not followed up or individuals are not suitable to the role of foster carer. Becoming a foster carer is not a decision taken lightly, and for those people who have only recently considered it as an option, fostering services are advised to encourage them to discuss it with their family to decide whether it is right for them. Others who come forward may have been thinking of doing it for a number of years, and this is the trigger to inspire them to take the next step.

For either, it's imperative that fostering services capture these individuals' details, invite them to sign up to receive a newsletter, follow or 'like' your social media channels, or even keep them in the loop for when information sessions are running. Developing these relationships that hold true to your fostering service's values will leave your service well-placed if the individual chooses to progress their application at a later stage or indeed to recommend you to one of their colleagues, friends or family.

NOT SUITABLE BUT COULD FOSTER? PASS THEM ON!

If an enquirer expresses a firm desire to only foster an age range or a type of foster care that you don't currently need or aren't expected to need, don't recruit them just to boost your numbers or turn them away. Put them in touch with another local fostering service you may work closely with that might urgently need people with their skills and qualities.